

Lost and Found (Book 2 of Valley Love)

Bailey Preston was heartbroken. The object of his desire was unattainable again. He thought he finally had Croy Fischer within his grasp, until the gorgeous man's true love came back into the picture. Now, Bailey dealt with pain on a daily basis, working for Croy, but unable to have him. A second unrequited love and Bailey was beginning to think he was just unlovable. The only other man he'd ever loved had disappeared from his life five years earlier. Dugan Connery. A man who held a special place in Bailey's heart despite knowing the man was terrified of commitment. A man who didn't know Bailey existed. A straight man. Bailey wasn't prepared for the return of Dugan when his angst over Croy was so fresh. He hadn't even known the man was back in town until he ran into him by accident. And Dugan had changed. And Dugan was gay? Would Bailey be able to kindle an unrequited love he thought lost forever? Did he want to? Two failed and bitter marriages later and Dugan finally realized he couldn't hide from what he was. Couldn't deny he had a high school sweetheart that was a man. Not that Bailey knew that. And he had finally come to grips with his darker side. A side that required total and unequivocal commitment. Now home in America, he wondered if the man he'd loved from a distance, would welcome him back. Especially once he found out what made Dugan tick.
